was transacted at the quarterly meeting of the City Bar Association in the Circult Court-room yesterday afternoon, the session having been given up to listen-ing to an eloquent address by Rev. Dr. E. effort provoked frequent rounds of appliause.

He spoke, in part, as follows:

"The subject upon which I have the honor to address this association. Is one that is interesting to all classes of enlightened society. The Mosaic Code commands attention because the threads of its thought are inextricably interwoven into every fabric of human activity. The seal of its influence has been stamped upon every institution of civilized humanity. Time was when this pervasive dominance was fruitage of the fact that men looked upon it as the expressed word of God and considered that its statutes were framed by Omniscience. Without desiring to enter into any phase of its theological aspect, or to discuss at all the subjects of inspiration of revelation, it may yet be said that, aside from these questions, removing from it altogether the prestige of its divine origin this code, by reason of its intrinsic merits, will stand out as the central sun of man's ethical universe. I trust to be able to point out to you some of its peculiar virtues, and to demonstrate to you that, although nearly 3,000 years of progress have passed since its earliest passages were recorded—3,000 years in which the human intellect and conscience have been most wonderfully developed and educated—in which man has made an almost complete conquest of the forces and agencies of nature, in which he has placed the infininging sceptre of his dominon upon the face of the earth, upon the beasts of the field, the birds in the air and the fish in the sea—in which he has called and counted the stars in the heavenes and the planets in their orbits, and has built for himself many systems of government and of law—yet in all this progress he has not been able to diever gereatly from, or improve upon, the lofty ethical ideals and the basic principles of justice that are contained and expressed in this ancient code.

Laws of Property.

"The Mosaic legislation regarding real property is peculiar. I think Moses would have disappointed our friend, Mr. Massle. He would not have approved of the Torrens system. The legislation was framed to prevent the sale and transfer of land, and to keep it as far as possible within the original allotments accorded to the families of each tribe on the settlement of Canaan. The particular laws that were to accomplish this were those of the Sabbatic and Jubilee years. (Deut. xv. and Levit. xxv.) Every seventh year the land was to lie fallow, it should have a Sabbath of rest. Only the spontaneous growth of the soil was available for use, and then, too, the stranger and the community and wild and domestic animals had a right to share with the owner. Likewise all mone tary obligations were annulled between Hebrews. The creditor was legally harred from making any attempt to collect his debt. (Deut. xv.) Every seventh Sabbatic year, i. e. every forty-ninth year, ushered in the Jubilee year, (bidem vs. 10). During it the regulations of the Sabbatic year were in force, and in addition thereto every man returned unto his possession. Every piece of land that had been sold or transferred was restored to its original owner without price and without

The Common Council will meet in adjourned session to-morrow night to complete the business of the January session. There is much yet to be done, and another busy session is assured. At Monday night's meeting the body completed only the reports of the Street and Finance Committees, and took in one recommendation of the Ordinance Committee.

There are many other recommendations from the Ordinance Committee, including a proposition of a 16 per cent increase in the satiaries of police officers and many other matters as to increases of salaries of city employes.

It is likely that other ordinances of great interest growing out of the developments at Monday's meeting may be offered including a resolution as to the question of establishing one or more new high schools.

the court. In addition to the civil safegrarias society considers also necessary the sanction of religion. The court issues the Heense, the church performs the ceremony. While it is true that some States permit a civil officer to perform the ceremony that renders the marriage valid, yet there are comparatively few couples who are content with this civil performance only. In Virginia, I believe, the rule is that only ministers or the accredited representatives of religious bedies officate at a marriage. This is a wise provision, for the reason that there is a moral and ethical aspect to the marriage relation that should be emphasized. Religion places upon the counle obligations, which, not comprehended in the civil law, are yet necessary to the consumpate happiness of which the relation is potent.

"The broad and basic principle underlying the whole thought of the Mosaic Code is that of, even-handed justice, There breathes throughout It the spirit of incorruptible justice, from the first cry of Abraham, 'Shall the Judge of all the earth not do justice?' (Gen. xwiii.
25) to that magnificent passage in Deut, xvi. 18-29, culminating in the injunction, 'Justice, justice only shalt thou pursue.' The code punishes the evil-doer, protects the poor, the weak and the oppressed on the basis of justion in all the relations of life and the intercourse of men. The Greek custon be a refuge for the criminal. There is a story that once a man had committed a foul crime and fled to a temple for refuge, and none dared to take him out, for he was under the protection of the god. But his mother was the first to take up a stone and block the door of the temple so that he could not commanded of the murderer, Trom Mine allar shalt thou "ke him,' that he may suffer the penalty of his crime.

The Influence of the Code,
"I have refrained from any comment

The Influence of the Code. "I have refrained from any comment upon the Ten Commandments. They stand alone. They are the unlaw flur ure in the history of human thought, the most stupendous achievement in the moral history of man. They are the crown lewel in the diadem of the Mosale Code. The influence of the code upon the story of human civilization is simply incalculable. There have been some who have as a live code upon the story of manner story zation is simply incalculable. There have been some who have of late at-tempted to take away the glory of it.

Mr. O'Flaherty of counsel for Mr. Hechler, said yesterday that they had not yet decided whether they would ask a jury hearing or not.

It is a matter of general knowledge that the practice of advancing taxes under certain conditions, which practice has been positively dealed by Mr. Hechler, has been a matter of general observance in many of the countles of the State. So great was the abuse in this matter, however, that a member of the Constitutional Convention stated that methods of preventing the custom had been discussed for two days on the floor of the convention. It was as a result of this practice that the constitutional provision was made that a county treasurer could serve but two successive terms,

CAN GET SPACE ELSEWHERE

Hon. John Whitehead, of Norfolk, com-missioner of the Jamestown Exposition, addressed at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon a meeting of gentle-men interested in the exhibit of Rich-mond manufactures at the exposition, and offered an explanation of the aban-donment of the plan to provide a special Virginia manufactures' building, as con-templated. The meeting was rether was great, and the exposition officials found that no other space would be left shown. After all the Virginia manufacturers who had applied for space in Virginia building are provided for in the general manufacturers builders, there is still left therein about 12,000 square feet of space, which the manufacturers of Richmond may secure i they desire. The exposition company has stopped considering applications for space in this building from outside manufacturers until shown. After all the Virginia manufacting from outside manufacturers until every Virginia manufacturer who desires to preempt space can secure the oppor-tunity to do so. It is understood, of course, that this space can not be held for them indefinitely.

Cost of Space Reduced.

Mr. Whitehead stated that cost of space in the general manufactures' building has been from $1.50 to $5 per square foot, while the cost in the contemplated Virginia manufacturers' building was from $1.50 to $2 per foot. The company has decided to offer Virginia manufacturers' building at the general manufacturers' building at the figure offered for the abandoned Virginia building.

After this statement the meeting adjourned with the understanding that Mr. Whitehead would ascertain and report to the secretary of the Camber of Commerce just he wmuch space was available and low long it will be open to Virginia manufacturers to lease.
